

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

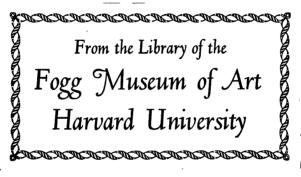

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

Introductory

HILADELPHIA is indebted to the thoughtful and munificent generosity of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Wilstach for the collection of art treasures herein catalogued. The former devoted a fortune, which he had gained in mercantile pursuits, to his own and his fellow-men's æsthetic cultivation, and during his busy life collected with much judgment and taste the paintings and statuary which form the nucleus of the Wilstach collection. The latter by economy and thrift so increased the fortune which she inherited from her husband as to enable her not merely to dedicate the collection to the perpetual enjoyment of her city, but also to afford it an endowment for its maintenance and increase such as few public galleries enjoy at the present time.

In her original will, dated July 31, 1873, she directed as follows:

"... Item. One other equal fourth part thereof unto the City of Philadelphia, if accepted by the Fairmount Park Commissioners as now authorized by Act of Assembly, upon the conditions and for the purposes following, namely:

"To erect a secure Art Gallery in said park for the exhibition of pictures and works in the Fine Arts, on a plan similar to the new building for such exhibition at Dresden in Saxony, to be so built as to admit of extension with the increase of funds without impairing the harmony of the edifice or destruction of any portion of the original building; but if there should be a suitable permanent building left in said Park after the Centennial celebration of 1876, in which pictures mentioned below may be received and preserved distinctly from other collections, so as to be known as the 'Wilstach Collection,' then the erection of another building may be omitted, and donations shall be accepted for said collection, and invited by the said Commissioners.

"To the said City, but to be under the custody and control of the said Fairmount Park Commissioners, I also direct all my paintings, pictures and statuary, including those of my late husband, to be given and transferred to the said city for said purposes and placed in the 'Wilstach Collection.' Their exhibition shall be public, under regulations to be established by the said Fairmount Park Commissioners, and as soon as practicable shall be gratuitous, and the opening thereof shall be as soon after my decease as a gallery can be provided for their reception.

"All the said fourth of said residuary estates not expended in erecting such hall of art, and the whole, if no such hall shall be required to be built out of said fund, shall be kept invested in lawful investments by the said Fairmount Park Commissioners, subject to the jurisdiction of the Courts having control of testamentary trusts; and the income thereof shall be by them applied to the purchase of pictures, paintings, and statuary for said collection, always keeping in view the purpose of obtaining objects of the highest skill and beauty, that they may be the source of pleasure and the means of cultivation and refinement of the tastes of the people, be pure in sentiment, and never minister to vulgarity and vice.

"Provided, however, that if the principal should exceed the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, then the excess over that sum may be used for the purchase of works of art."

In the final codicil to the said will, dated March 7th, A. D. 1890, the testatrix devised to the City of Philadelphia, as follows:

". . . Item. I give and bequeath to the City of Philadelphia all my paintings, engravings, statuary, photographs, books of art, and catalogues of various galleries in Europe, and America. Also my books denominated 'Dresden Gallery,' containing engravings of the paintings in the Dresden Galleries, in Dresden, Saxony, and all works of art owned by me at the time of my decease, in trust nevertheless, to, for and upon the following uses, intents and purposes, to wit: To place the said paintings, statuary, photographs and works of art in the possession and under the control of the Commissioners of Fairmount Park, to be placed by them in Memorial Hall in Fairmount Park, there to be preserved by them, and taken care of and kept in good order, as the nucleus or foundation of an Art Gallery for the use and enjoyment of the people. The collection to be kept together and known and designated by the name of the 'W. P. Wilstach Collection.' And I direct my Executors to transfer to the Commissioners of Fairmount Park, in like manner in trust, the one other fourth part of the residue and remainder of the said estate and estates, which said sum shall be invested in good and lawful securities by the said Commissioners of Fairmount Park. And the interest accruing therefrom shall be used for the maintenance of said Art Gallery, in keeping the same in good order and condition and providing of competent care-takers, as may be necessary to carry out, to its full and complete extent and meaning, the design I have in view in making this devise and bequest for the founding and sustaining an Art Gallery in Fairmount Park for the use and enjoyment and benefit of the public. . . . "

It is certainly a happy coincidence that, as anticipated by the testatrix, this collection should find its first home in the memorial building, which during the Centennial Exposition, contained the first cosmopolitan art collection exhibited in this country. How much of artistic inspiration America derived from this friendly rivalry of nations need not be here considered. Our national art was then in its infancy and suffered by comparison with its elder and more favored sisters. Invigorated by the stimulus of competition with the masterpieces of other lands, it has since attained such sturdy growth as to challenge comparison with the best of every clime.

Memorial Hall is, however, reserved more especially for the exhibition of works of industrial art, and it was accordingly only a question of time when the Wilstach collection would require a special and more suitable building for its pictures.

The liberal spirit and broad-minded enterprise of Philadelphia has already planned a future home for this collection, and of others which may hereafter be given to the city of Philadelphia by public-spirited citizens. It is gratifying to note that the manner in which this design was selected, and the means proposed towards its beginning have received general acquiescence and public approval.

At the instance of the Fairmount Park Commission the Councils of the City of Philadelphia appropriated, in the year 1894, the sum of $15,000, to pay the expenses of a competition, which should be open to the architects of the world, for an appropriate design for an art gallery, in which the Wilstach and other collections could be permanently placed. The Park Commission issued a circular, in which four prizes, of $6000, $3000, $2000, and $1000, respectively, were offered for the four most meritorious designs; and as a result of this exceptionally munificent offer, designs were sent in by architects from different parts of the world.

The result was such an embarras des richesses that the chief difficulty became one of selection. For this purpose a committee of experts was appointed to report to the Park Commission the eight most acceptable plans in the order of merit. The experts could not have been better selected. They were Daniel H. Burnham, of Chicago, so favorably known in connection with that magnificent triumph of American art, the Chicago Exposition; Stanford White, of New York, who could speak on matters of architecture ex cathedra; William R. Ware, of Columbia College; Joseph M. Wilson, a distinguished engineer of this city, and John G. Johnson, Esq., of the Philadelphia Bar. On December 3, 1895, this Committee of Experts made its report, and the Fairmount Park Commission on the same day adopted its conclusion. The first prize was awarded to James Bite and Henry Bacon, of New York; the second to Lord, Hewlett and Hull, of the same city; the third to Marcel Perouse, of Paris, and the fourth to Howard and Caldwell, of New York. Both Committee and Commission were unanimous in this award, and the design can hardly fail to win general commendation. The several experts were enthusiastic as to the character of the work submitted in competition, and especially as to the design which received the first prize. Their report states, that in determining their selection regard was had to the conditions required "for an extensive art museum, namely, continuous galleries in both stories, surrounding large top-lighted courts.

and most satisfactory, and we recommend its adoption by the Commission as the one which best fulfills the requirements of the problem both from a practical and architectural standpoint; and we believe from the careful study of detail shown by these drawings that the Commission can entrust the building of the museum to its author or authors with confidence; that its faults can easily be corrected, and that the completed building will justify its selection. We recommend the use of white marble for the exterior of the Art Museum."

It is equally gratifying to note that there is already a fund in hand for the beginning of this most important work, and it is a happy coincidence that this fund is the unconscious benefaction to this proposed gallery of the most distinguished man who ever lived in Philadelphia. Benjamin Franklin gave, by the codicil to his will, dated April 23, 1790, "the sum of £1,000 to the corporation of the City of Philadelphia to invest for one hundred years," and, at the expiration of a century, to "lay out at their discretion £100,000 in public works, which may be judged of most general utility to the inhabitants, such as fortifications, bridges, aqueducts, public buildings, baths, pavements, or whatever may make a living in town more convenient to its people and render it more agreeable to strangers resorting thither for health and temporary residence." The remaining £31,000 was, in such event, to be reinvested for another hundred years, and so following. The far-seeing old Doctor, after predicting that the construction of buildings and streets in the city would ultimately "prevent its (the rain) soaking into the earth and renewing and purifying the springs, whence the waters of the wells must gradually grow worse and in time be unfit for use," said . . . "I recommend at the end of the first hundred years, if not done before, the corporation of the city employ a part of the £100,000 in bringing by pipes the waters of the Wissahickon Creek into the town." This recommendation shows how inadequate was the foresight of even so widely versatile and profoundly learned a thinker as Dr. Franklin. The city of Franklin has long since outgrown the waters of the Wissahickon as a source of supply, and at the expiration of one hundred years the city, through its Board of Trusts. was obliged to consider other objects to which to divert the stream of Franklin's bounty. Considering the perennial significance of art and the pleasure and instruction that it affords in any cultured community, what could make "living in the town more convenient to its people and render it more agreeable to strangers" than an art gallery, in which the masterpieces of the brush and of the chisel, which command world-wide recognition, could be studied? The old philosopher felt constrained in the conclusion of his codicil to indicate the fear that perhaps he had "too much flattered myself with a vain fancy that these dispositions, if carried into execution, will be continued without interruption and have the effects proposed. I hope, however, that if the inhabitants of the two cities should not see fit to undertake the commission, that they will at least accept the offer of these donations as a mark of my good will, a token of my gratitude and a testimony of my earnest desire to be useful to them after my departure."

To this end the Board of City Trusts has conditionally appropriated a portion of the fund, which has accumulated during the century, to the Fairmount Park Commission for the purpose of constructing this art gallery. It is probable that no object could have been selected more in keeping with the broad, liberal mind and cultured philanthropy of Benjamin Franklin than the present. It is certainly a happy augury that the initial fund for the construction of this great temple of art should come from the same presiding genius who fathered the University of Pennsylvania, who helped to found the American Philosophical Society, the Philadelphia Library and the Pennsylvania Hospital, and who in his many-sided genius as statesman, scientist, author, philanthropist, diplomat and philosopher left such an enduring impress not only on the great city of his choice, but also on his country and the world at large.

Whether this noble project can be successfully carried out, or not, the Wilstach collection of pictures has already taken rank with the art collections of the world.

It cannot fail to carry out the noble purpose of its donors, "to be the source of pleasure and the means of cultivation and refinement of the tastes of the people." In a community, world-famous for its great material interests, it will teach the infinite utility of beauty. Generations unborn will honor its donors and draw artistic inspiration from their noble gift. This is their monument, serving to perpetuate the memory of their philanthropy and public spirit to the after ages. May this important public work be continued by those to whom the trust is confided, in the spirit of Ruskin, whose great message to men was the high moral purpose of art:

"When we build, let us think that we build forever. Let it not be for the present delight nor the present use alone; let it be such work as our descendants will thank us for and let us think, as we lay stone on stone, that a time is to come when these stones will be held sacred because our hands have touched them and that men will say as they look upon the labor and wrought substance of them: 'See, this our fathers did for us.'"

ALEXANDER (John W.)

New York

Contemporary Sociétaire de la Société Nationale des Beaux Arts

This portrait of the celebrated Swedish artist, M. Thaulow, is strong in characterization. Expressed with frankness and force, the treatment is thoroughly individual, fluent and direct. Mr. Alexander is one of the most distinguished of contemporary American painters.

ANSELMI (Michelangelo)

Italy

Born, Lucca, 1491. Died, Parma, after 1554.
Pupil of Il Sodoma. Influenced by Correggio
Lombard School

When Correggio was chosen to decorate the cupola and the tribune of the Cathedral at Parma, Anselmi was one of three men selected to decorate the chapels. The affinity between the two artists led to Anselmi becoming the disciple and imitator of the "Faun of the Renaissance," Correggio, the lover of joyousness, tenderness, charm and beauty.

Anthonissen (H. (Hendrik?) Van)

Holland

Flourished middle of 17th Century

This characteristic coast scene has a charm of atmospheric effect, a delicacy of color and a distinction of tone which command the highest admiration. This quality of luminous, enveloping gray also constituted the charm of the work of Van Goyen to whose influence Anthonissen was most responsive.

"The Gamesters" presents a picturesque and artistic totality. The subtle light of the picture is painted with an analysis and truth that are chiefly mental. Carolus Duran has said: "Painting is not done with the eyes. It is done with the brains for order, with the heart for love, with the emotions for sentiment and feeling."

Legion of Honor, 1890. Hors Concours
Chevalier de l'Ordre de Saint Michel de Baviere
Membre de la Société des Artistes français
Sociétaire de la Société National des Beaux Arts

This picture is a daring and successful experiment. A clear and positive green light diffuses the flesh tones of the figure as well as a room that is full of warm red color. The result is strikingly effective, being additionally distinguished by intelligence and veracity.

AVERCAMP (Hendrik, surnamed de Stomme (Mute) van Kampen)

Holland

Born, probably at Kampen, about 1585. Died about 1635

Winter scenes, such as the present picture, form the subject of most of the valued paintings by Avercamp. Many skaters are seen sharply defined against the ice, those in the center of the picture being engaged in some national sport. The well dressed burgher and the humble villager pass back and forth from the surrounding picturesque village. This entire scene, characterists of Holland, is presented in a charming tone of silver and gray.

11. Landscape

BACCICCIO IL (Gio. Battista Gaulli)

Italy

Born, Genoa, 1639. Died, Rome, 1709 Pupil of Luciano Borzone Genoese School

This painter so developed his abilities by an early study of the great masters at Rome that he won both position and wealth. His most important religious picture decorates the Church of the Gesù at Rome. Bacciccio painted the portraits of many of the illustrious nobles and cardinals of his time and had the unique experience of painting no less than seven of the popes. Bacciccio was an accomplished machinist as well as a famous artist.

BARKER (Thomas) (called Barker of Bath)

England

Born, Pontepool, England, 1769. Died, Bath, 1847 Studied with his father, Benjamin Barker, and in Rome

Thomas Barker spent the first four years of his artistic life in copying the works of the Dutch and Flemish masters. Finding a valuable patron in Mr. Spackman, a wealthy coach builder of Bath, he was later given the opportunity to follow his artistic bent. After an advantageous visit to Rome he returned to Bath and entered upon a very successful career. Though he painted an occasional portrait and religious picture as well as one important fresco in his house at Bath, he is chiefly known by his landscapes with their groups of rustics or of gypsies, such as the picture here exhibited.

BASSANO (Jocopo, the elder) (Jacopo da Ponte)

Italy

Born, Bassano, 1510. Died, Bassano, 1592
Pupil of his father, Francesco de Ponte, the elder, of Bonifazio Veneziano and, it is said, of Titian
Venezian School

This genre painter of Venice won the highest praise even from such masters as Titian and Tintoretto. Paola Veronese so appreciated his ability that he sent his son Carlo to him to be instructed "more particularly in regard to that just disposition of lights reflected from one object to another, and in those happy counter positions, owing to which the depicted object seems clothed with a profusion of light." Bassano treated religious subjects as though they were the familiar scenes of his own time, thus unconsciously rendering the simple country life that surrounded him. They are conspicuous for masterly chiaroscuro and for an excellence of color truly Venetian. Berenson writes: "Most of his pictures seem as dazzling, then as cooling and soothing, as the best kind of stained glass: while the coloring of details, particularly of those under high lights, is jewel like, as clear and deep and satisfying as rubies and emeralds."

Born, Damvillers, 1848. Died, Paris, 1884. Pupil of Cabanel Medals, 1874-75-78 Legion of Honor. 1870

An artistic career of but twelve years, yet great in achievement. The truth, force and sincerity of his art have won world-wide recognition and admiration. Among his brother artists he is especially The distinguished painter, Dagnan-Bouvalued. veret, writes: "He is always present with me, and whenever I paint a new picture, I ask myself if it would have satisfied him." Jules Breton says: "Bastien-Lepage will leave a lasting fame. This young artist, cut down in the flush of his promise, was a true investigator. How conscientious was his work! He made his debut with a masterpiece, the 'Portrait of my grandfather.' Touching familiarity, simple and accurate drawing, admirable truth of tone, strong and fine harmony, just relation of the figure to the background—all are there. When the King of Belgium conferred the Leopold Cross upon this "honored master," as Claretie terms Rosa Bonheur, it was given, it is said, for the first time to a woman. The Emperor Napoleon III. hesitated to honor her work with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, lest popular judgment might condemn the award. When he decided finally that the question of sex should not interfere with the recognition of such conspicuous merit, the Empress Eugénie surprised the artist in her studio, and "Saluting the new knight with a kiss," Rosa Bonheur relates, "she pinned the decoration to my black velvet jacket." During the Franco-Prussian war, the studio and residence of the artist were respected by special command of the Crown Prince of Prussia, afterward the Emperor Frederic of Ger-This appreciation by the rulers both of her own country and of Germany, is shared by the entire world of art, which recognizes in her an artist of first rank. She painted animal life with a hearty love, vigorous style and fine feeling for color, space and composition.

Only the marked artistic ability exhibited by Bouguereau reconciled his parents to his withdrawal from a business career. He was the architect of his own fortune, earning by portrait painting the money which enabled him to study in the art schools of Paris. A large number of his pictures are to be found in America, where he has probably appealed to a more varied public than any other modern painter. "We admit that a little more frankness in the touch would give to his painting a reality which sometimes is wanting," writes René Ménard. "Rusticity is not with this painter an instinctive sentiment. But leaving this reserve it must be acknowledged that M. Bouguereau's children are delightful and his composition charming; his drawing is correct, even to rigidity; he possesses a gracefulness and a fecundity of invention attested by the immense number of his pictures . . . Whether he paints mythological subjects or rustic scenes, M. Bouguereau always exhibits three qualities which justify his reputation,—knowledge, taste and refinement."

Brueghel excelled in the landscape backgrounds he gave to his figure subjects. CANO (Alonzo)

Spain

Born, Granada, 1601. Died, Granada, 1667
Studied painting with Pacheco and sculpture with Montanes
Painter to the King, 1637
Appointed Canon in the Cathedral at Granada, 1652

Distinguished in the sister arts of painting, sculpture and architecture, Cano won the title of the Spanish Michelangelo. Such was his versatility that all parts of his monumental altar pieces, whether wood carvings, statues or paintings, represented his own work. Even before his twentieth year, Cano had executed many works for the city of Seville which were greatly admired, refusing all remuneration for these, however, on the ground that he wrought for practice and improvement alone, and not for money. In consequence of a duel with a fellow painter, Cano was obliged to leave Seville for Madrid. through the favor of Velasques he obtained protection and advancement. With the exception of this master it was Fuseli's opinion that Cano excelled in painting all his contemporaries. His pictures are statuesque, of classical simplicity and suavity, and full of fine decisive drawing. In "A Dominican" the character is given with splendid analysis and interpretation. A study of the canvas reveals to us even after the lapse of centuries, just what manner of man the subject was.

CARAVAGGIO (Michelangelo Da) (Michelangelo Amerighi or Merighi) Italy

> Born, Caravaggio, 1569. Died, Porto Ercole, 1609 Studied in Milan, Venice, Rome Roman School

The Naturalists, with Caravaggio at their head, were opposed to idealism in art or to even those principles that were founded on selection from nature. Their aim was to imitate without modification. The saints and apostles in the religious pictures painted by Caravaggio frequently represented mere Neapolitan models, porters or bandits. In extraordinary effects of light and shadow, however, even Rubens acknowledged Caravaggio's mastery to be superior to his own. His pictures, if somewhat morose and brutal, are painted with an impetuous action and furious energy thoroughly characteristic of that fierceness of temper which led Caravaggio to kill a companion in a dispute while playing tennis. He fled to Naples and later to Malta. Here, again attempting to avenge a quarrel, he was cast into prison. In the pursuit which followed his escape, he was severely wounded. A pardon was obtained but through a mistake Caravaggio was again arrested and later released only to wander despondingly along the coast, till suffering from wounds, hardships, and from the excessive heat, he died from fever on the beach at Porte Ercole.

Contemporary with the school of the Naturalists was that of the Eclectics, led by the five Carracci. Of these Annibale was the most distinguished and diversified. In 1600 he accepted the invitation of Cardinal Odoardo Farnese to visit Rome, there to decorate a vaulted ceiling of the Farnese Palace. This decoration, representing various mythological subjects illustrative of celestial and terrestrial love, was much admired, Poussin preferring it, after the work of Raphael, to all the art in Rome. Impressed by the coloring, Caravaggio exclaimed, "God be praised! at last I have found one painter in my lifetime."

CARRACCI (Lodovico)

Italy

Born, Bologna, 1555. Died, Bologna, 1617.

Lodovico Caracci was the founder of the celebrated Academy of the Incamminati (Right Road), conducted by the Caracci. Based on the art of their great predecessors, these men taught a union of Renaissance excellences. Their well known sonnet demanded the "Venetian action and management of shade, the dignified color of Lombardy, the terrible manner of Michelangelo, Titian's truth and nature, the sovereign purity of Correggio's style, and the just symmetry of a Raphael, etc." From this school came the Eclectics of Bologna, whose technical skill strongly influenced all the schools of Italy. Although Lodovico Caracci excelled as a teacher rather than as a painter, he left work of much intelligence both in fresco and in oil. Sir Joshua Reynolds comments on "his breadth of light and shadow, the simplicity of his coloring, and the solemn effect of that twilight which seems diffused over his pictures."

With an authority of design, with drawing, admirable and unconstrained, with color soft and brilliant, with a rapid, flowing and certain brush, has Giacinto Corradi given a noble and beautiful interpretation of his subject. "Art is surely but a series of conventions, which enable us to express our special sense of beauty—for beauty is everywhere and abounds in subtle manifestations," writes George Moore.

COSTA (Lorenzo)

Italy

Born, Ferrara, 1460. Died, Mantua, 1535 Studied the works of Lippi and Benozzo Gozzoli Bolognese School

"Costa was not unlikely the real founder, or, at least, the strongest influencer of the Bolognese school," writes John C. Van Dyke. "He was a painter of a rugged, manly type, afterward tempered by Southern influences to softness and sentiment. This was the result of Paduan methods meeting at Bologna with Umbrian sentiment." The type of the "Madonna of the Throne" is one of singular tenderness, purity and earnestness of feeling. In the picture entire, the color, decoration and the sincere gravity of the painter, amply compensate for some characteristic peculiarities.

He refused the Cross of the Legion of Honor after accepting that of the Order of St. Michael from the King of Bavaria

Originally destined for the law, Courbet was sent to Paris in 1839 for his legal training. Art and its problems, however, so absorbed his attention that the study of law was dropped, and in 1844 he exhibited his first picture, which showed the marked originality and bold personality of the artist. Of a degmatic and aggressive disposition, he was soon engaged in a bitter warfare against all conventionality, scorning alike the then accepted schools of Classicism and Romanticism, and claiming that Nature, studied from the standpoint of observation and discernment rather than that of intellectuality

CROOS (Anthony Jan Van Der)

Holland

Born, 1606 or 1607. Died, The Hague, 1662 Influenced by Jan Van Goyen

The landscape painters of Holland have been credited with being the first to treat their subject with realism. Certainly they were the first to study it for its own sake and to consider it worthy of use as a picture motive. The execution of these painters was sincere and appropriate and the subjects they chose for their pictures showed their love for their Fatherland. "It is wrong for a painter to abandon the country in which he was born, and in which he passed his youth," writes Alfred Stevens. During this period the painters of Holland represented their country and the lives of its people with close fidelity.

One of the celebrated group of Barbizon painters, Daubigny has made world famous the river scenery of central France. Light, air, and color were studied from the floating studio he had constructed and when the clear day was slowly fading into the night his mind became exceedingly keen and appreciative. "The art of this illustrious master," writes Edmond About, "consists in choosing well a bit of country, and painting it as it is, enclosing in its frame all the simple and naïve poetry which it contains . . . How willingly would we sojourn in that one, beside that fresh water, where the cows take their evening bath! Night falls, the thrushes send forth their last cry, the nightingale begins to sing."

The great movement of Romanticism that swept over England, Germany and France in the early part of this century, influenced both letters and art and brought to the front such champions as Byron. Victor Hugo, and the intrepid leader, Delacroix. Discontented with the exaggerations of false Classicism and the superficial elegance of academic formulæ insisted upon reign of the classic school, Delacroix gave us pictures of spontaneous and intense sentiment, of dramatic power and imagination, of passionate desire to express the inexpressible by combination of color, atmosphere and action. "The atmosphere, tragic, and at times sublime, that surrounds them, is a pure creation of the master," writes Jules Breton. Delacroix executed many public commissions and died full of honors. Time but adds to his accumulating fame. Theophile Gautier writes of "L'Amende Honorable": "The scene passes in the great convent reception room of the monastery. The shade envelops the high arched vaulting. The wall in the depth is pierced with long windows, with triple mullions. On the walls of the room, vague paintings, outline themselves in a half tint, obscure phantoms of coloration. On the left of the tableaux is a dais, under the throne of which sits a mitred figure, an abbé or archbishop in sacerdotal habit, surrounded by some acolytes. Before the abbé they drag, holding him under his arm, the condemned to make 'amende honorable.' "

Born of Spanish parentage, this landscape and figure painter, though a faulty draughtsman, had the glow, splendor and the fire of the South. At the age of fifteen years he left the manufacturer of porcelain, to whom he had been apprenticed, to go to Paris, where, although extremely poor and crippled by the loss of a leg, he entered the arena of life. Success crowned his efforts to a large degree and with a lavish hand he dispensed that which he gained to those in distress. It was in the forest of Fontainebleau with its majestic oaks, deep recesses, and gleams of sunlight, that Diaz found his greatest inspiration.

Another eminent pupil of the Caracci; one who has been rated as second only to Raphael. Poussin even considered the St. Jerome painted by Domenichino as the third great painting of the world. we now consider as too high this traditional estimate. his work is nevertheless of marked power. These figures, representing "The Seven Virtues," are well imagined and composed, being painted with much authority and breadth. Fuselli says that "the forms of Domenichino's female faces are ideal; their expression is poised between pure helpless virginity and sainted ecstacy." Although mild and courteous in disposition. Domenichino seems to have excited the extreme hostility of rival painters. He was so persecuted and threatened by the infamous triumvirate known as the "Cabal of Naples," that he either was worried to his death, or was poisoned outright by his enemies.

Born, Antwerp, 1599. Died, London, 1641
Pupil of Hendrik Van Balen and Peter Paul Rubens
Member of the Guild of Antwerp, 1618
Court painter to Charles I.
Knighted, 1622

"Van Dyck has not, like Rubens, the love of power and of life for life itself;" writes Taine; "more refined, more chivalric, born with a sensitive and even melancholy nature, elegiac in his sacred subjects, aristocratic in his portraits, he depicts with less glowing and more sympathetic color noble, tender, and charming figures whose generous and delicate souls are filled with sweet and sad emotions unknown to his master." The portraits of Van Dyck were the inspiration of such painters as Reynolds, Gainsborough and Lawrence. The pictures which represent sacred subjects belong to the period of his greatest executive power. Rubens was the generous patron of his early years as well as his sympathetic master. In 1630 Van Dyck accepted the invitation of Charles I. to visit England, where apartments at Blackfriars and a summer residence at Eltham were placed at his disposal. "The order of precedence which should be given him in the procession of great men has never been exactly determined," writes Eugène Fromentin, "but since his death, as during his life, he seems to have retained the privilege of being placed near the throne, and of being a distinguished presence there."

A master of two distinct modes of expression, that of the brush and of the pen. His pen pictures of African travel and his criticisms of the old masters of Belgium and Holland shine forth in a nation of writers who are famous for their descriptive and critical work. His brush pictures have a deep and pure appreciation as well as a delicacy of treatment that brought him speedily to the front rank of the great French painters. One is amply compensated for the slight faultiness of drawing—the result of insufficient academic training—by his comprehensive grasp of the subject, his glowing color and poetic feeling.

Handsome, enthusiastic, impulsive, warm-hearted and, if somewhat capricious and easily irritated, generous to a fault, Gainsborough was the artistic temperament personified. Devoted to art in every form, actors and musicians were his chosen associates. In landscape and portraiture, Gainsborough from the first occupied one of the highest places in the English school of painting. The French critic, M. Chesneau, calls him "the father, the originator of modern landscape," and his distinguished rival, Sir Joshua Reynolds, declares: "Whether he most excelled in portraits, landscape, or fancy pictures it is difficult to determine." The favorite painter of the king, Gainsborough has left us vivid portraits of the royal family and the eminent men and women of his day. "Deep-thoughted, solemn Gainsborough," writes Ruskin, "pure in his English feeling, profound in his seriousness, graceful in his gayety. A great name his, whether of the English or any other school—the greatest colorist since Rubens. . . . His hand is as light as the sweep of a cloud, as swift as the flash of a sunbeam. Born, Leyden, 1596. Died, The Hague, 1696 Pupil of Esaias van der Velde President of the Guild, 1640

One of the earliest of the seventeenth century landscapists, Van Goyen was one of the first to discover that landscape in itself was a motive adaptable to pictorial treatment. Prior to this the figure alone was considered a picture motive, landscape was to be used simply as an accessory or a background. Van Goyen studied atmospheric effects with the most happy results, giving a refined analysis in quiet silvery color, of light skies with drifting clouds. The Dutch harbors, with their characteristic ships, buildings and wind-mills, constituted a favorite subject and one for which he is justly famous.

GRECO, EL (Domenico Theotocopuli)

Toledo

Born, 1548. Died, Toledo, 1625 Pupil of Titian

El Greco, so-called from his Greek parentage, studied in Venice, that home of rich color and flowing pictorial drawing. During his long residence in Spain his color seems to have become cold and grey in tone, and he acquired also an accurate but inflexible draughtsmanship. In his treatment of religious subjects, however, there is a dignity of composition, together with a power of conveying the idea and type he sought to express that was both eloquent and dramatic. Many of the Spanish painters were his pupils and disciples, but his influ-, ence was not confined to men of his own country. Millet, the French master of poetic force and simplicity, owned a picture by Greco in order that its influence might be always with him. Later this picture was purchased by M. Degas, that delightful brushman and painter of motion. The Church of the Hospital of Charity at Illescas is a monument to the united skill of Greco as architect and sculptor.

GUERCINO, IL (Giovanni Francesco Barbieri)

Italy

Born, Cento, 1591. Died, Bologna, 1666. Bolognese School

Il Guercino, so called from a defect in his eyes, was of humble parentage. His father supplied the nearest town with wood, the little Giovanni Francesco taking care of his cart. The boy gave early indication of uncommon artistic talent. Before his tenth year he had painted a figure of the Virgin on a side of his father's house with a skill that would have been considered remarkable even at a more mature age. this head of St. Joseph we see the intellectual conception and elevated taste, the fine and yet glowing color, together with that delicate touch so characteristic of the painter. When Queen Christiana of Sweden passed through Bologna she visited Guercino, expressing the pleasure she felt at taking into her own the untiring hand which had painted one hundred and six altar pieces as well as one hundred and forty-four pictures for leading personages of Europe. With the great riches acquired by his profession, Guercino built chapels, founded hospitals, and gave liberaly in all acts of charity.

Bologna

Born, Bologna, 1575. Died, Bologna, 1642 Pupil of Denis Calvart and Lodovico Caracci Bolognese School

The father of Guido Reni was a musician and early directed his son's talents to the study of the harpsichord. At the age of nine, however, Guido showed such a determination to be a painter that he was given an opportunity of studying art, and before his thirteenth year had attained marked proficiency. When the handsome boy entered the school of the Carracci he was frequently painted as an angel in the pictures of his master. In 1608, Guido went to Rome, where he gained distinction and was given many important commissions in the pontificate of Paul V. (Borghese). Twenty years later he settled in Bologna and established a celebrated school. Here he lived in great splendor for a time. Gradually, however, his immense fortune was squandered in dissipation, gambling, and—to the credit of this man of many gifts, be it said—by indiscriminate generosity. At last he was reduced to sell-----

The pictures of Mr. Harrison are portrayed with such admirable simplicity of method that they seem to exist; they are a materialized vision of the artist. The effect in "Le Grand Miroir" is called into consciousness by the subtle skill of delicate gradation in the transparent, vibrant air and water, with their secret depth and mysterious expanse. Mr. Harrison is one of a group of men who have brought America into prominence before the world of art by the breadth of his accomplishment, but it is in the interpretation of the sea that he finds his most forcible technical expression.

HELST (Lodewyk, Lodewijk van der)

Amsterdam

Born, Amsterdam, 1642 or 43. Died, after 1680 Pupil of his father, Bartholomeus van der Helst

The work of the portrait painter is not unlike that of the historian or the novelist; in a painted record of an individual we find the same observation and analysis that is required in a written description. The sedate individuality of the figures represented here and the truth of expression are rendered with a keen insight which makes this group both notable and enduring. They show the calm and earnest point of view evinced by Lodewyk van der Helst and are reminiscent of the quiet dignity of composition, firm modelling, excellent detail and easy solid painting that placed his father, Bartholomeus, in the front rank of the Dutch master portraitists.

HERRERA (Francisco de, the elder)

Spain

Born, Seville, about 1576. Died, Madrid, 1656 Pupil of Luis Fernandez

Herrera "the terrible" was unquestionably the precursor of Spanish realism. He had the honor of reforming the insipid taste of his country by adopting a vigorous and original style of painting that anticipated Velasques. He painted his pictures as he did everything else, in a sort of frenzy, and the boldness of his brush was equalled only by the impetuosity of his temper. His students, among whom was the preeminent Velasques, and even his children, soon left him, owing to his violence. A fondness for engraving medals led to an accusation of coining false money, and Herrera was obliged to take refuge in the sanctuary of the Jesuits' College. Here he painted a noble altar piece, and Philip IV. seeing the picture, granted a free pardon to the painter.

Holland

Born, Utrecht, 1636. Died, Amsterdam, 1695 Pupil of Gysbert d'Hondecoeter and Jan Baptista Wienix Member of The Hague Guild, 1659-63

Hondecoeter stands unrivalled in the painting of game, poultry and birds of beautiful plumage. He has portrayed with great spirit and accuracy not only their appearance, but also their varied habits, motions and characteristics. In rich color, and with a masterful brush, he suggests an all-pervading life, unique in its expression of joy, hate, fear or love. Burger says that Hondecoeter displays "the maternity of the hen with as much tenderness and feeling as Raphael, the maternity of Madonnas."

New York

Born, Newburgh, New York, 1825. Died, 1894 National Academician, 1868

To this thoughtful and analytical student has been unanimously conceded the first place in American landscape art. His fame, which is international, has been won by a life spent in the profound study of each problem of his art, wrought out with an unfailing vitality and energy, a positiveness of action and certainty of result, which, in its continuity, is unique. His style has undergone many changes, but the marked personality of his work has always a fascinating interest. There is an underlying breadth of purpose, an appeal to the imagination, a power in the solid mass and bulk of nature as he saw and expressed it, and in his later work especially, a mastery of atmospheric effects, of the problems of light, air and color.

It is characteristic of the Dutch painter to aim at thoroughness in one direction. The theme of this picture, an extensive tract of country seen from a height against gray rolling clouds, was painted again and again by Koninck. His fame rests on its achievement rather than on his portraits and historical pictures. There is a surprising truth to nature in the landscape; a breadth of conception given always in color, warm and clear. His pictures are valuable for their rarity as well as for their excellence some of the finest being in the private English collections.

The artistic ability to rise superior to a prosaic environment is well illustrated when, in 1890, there emerged from the smoky, busy, manufacturing city of Glasgow a group of men which had developed a style of painting as distinguished as it was individual. The French and Dutch Romanticists had been a powerful factor in forming their ideals. The art of Japan was much in evidence in their feeling for the decorative quality of a picture, but James A. McNeill Whistler was and is the high priest of the order whose word is authority. Mr. Lavery is one of the best known representatives of this Glasgow school.

Forty-three years of the rank, the genius and the loveliness of his day still live on the canvasses of Sir Thomas Lawrence. At the early age of six this precocious genius sketched likenesses, by ten he was the main support of his family, and before he was twelve he had portrayed Mrs. Siddons and made his studio at Bath, a fashionable resort. Handsome, with a voice low and musical, and of winning courtesy of manner, Lawrence became the most popular as well as the most celebrated painter of his time. With his intense appreciation for the polite and well bred, he is said to have painted "nobility to look more noble and grace to look more gracious." His brushwork is remarkably facile and brilliant. His color and composition adroit, sparkling, decorative, ever showing the elegance and luxury characteristic of contemporary Europe. After his death a selection of ninety-one of his works was exhibited at the British Institute. He was interred with much pomp in St. Paul's Cathedral, where he rests by the side of his predecessor, Sir Joshua Reynolds.

Son of a village schoolmaster, grandson of one of the expert vine-dressers of the vicinity, the boy Lhermitte was far better pleased to be with his sturdy grandfather in the fields, learning of nature, than in the schoolroom droning over his books. Very early he began to make little drawings of his keen impressions, and a generous country gentleman, who recognized the talent he displayed, sent him to Paris to be educated as an artist. With the most realistic truthfulness Lhermitte has perpetuated his affection for the rural life and rustic subjects of his youth, showing keen powers of observation, strong draughtsmanship and modelling, a fine discrimination between detail and over-elaboration and a good knowledge of grouping and composition. It has been said that upon his shoulders has fallen the mantle of Millet.

Diderot considered that this painter in his early years showed "all the signs of genius." In the beginning of his career he assisted his brother, Jean Baptiste, to restore the gallery of Francis I. at Fontainebleau, and also designed costumes and decorations for the Opera of Paris. In 1727, Van Loo went to Rome, where he executed work of monumental decoration. Returning to Paris in 1737 he year by year was the recipient of all the official honors of his profession. Van Loo composed his pictures with taste and judgment, criticising each work with a severe and impartial eye. One, of which he disapproved, was totally destroyed although it had been publicly exhibited at the Louvre.

Born, Alba. Flourished about 1500 and died prior to 1528
Probably studied at Milan

In this Triptych are found accentuated the vigor and fertile invention characteristic of this skillful Italian painter. Charles C. Perkins states that Macrino d'Alba was "an excellent painter, of great expressiveness in his countenances, brilliant coloring, masterly treatment of details, fine feeling for chiaroscuro, and solid impasto; the first Piedmontese artist who made advances towards the realistic style of the Paduans."

MARATTI (Maratta) (Carlo) Cavaliere

Italy

Born, Camerano, 1625. Died, Rome, 1713
Pupil of Andrea Sacchi
Appointed by Innocent XII. superintendent of the paintings in the Vatican
Order of Christ conferred by Clement XI.
Prince of the Academy of St. Luke
Roman School

The enviable reputation of having "sustained the art of Rome, where it did not degenerate as at other places," was accorded by Raphael Mengs to this painter. Fondly attached to his master, Andrea Sacchi, it was said that nothing but death could separate the two. Through Sacchi's influence Maratti obtained his first large commission. Later he executed many other works for churches and public buildings becoming one of the most popular painters of Rome. Clement XI. selected him to restore the frescoes of Raphael. "A task requiring infinite care and judgment, and which he performed to the satisfaction of his patron," comments Bellori. The painting of Maratti is graceful, broad and firm, and is suggestive of much that is attractive in the various Italian schools.

Very few circumstances are recorded regarding the life of this painter. It is noteworthy that in 1492 he was employed by Giovanni Bellini as journeyman during the decoration of the Hall of the Great Council in the Venetian Palazzo Ducale. Pictures by Marziale in the Venice Academy and in the Berlin museum suggest the arrangement of Carpaccio with a strong leaning towards the minute details of the German school. Two other fine examples of his art are in the National Gallery at London.

A man of highly sensitive organization, his earlier works were efforts to give pictorial form to musical impressions received from the art of Beethoven, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Liszt, and from old melodies and hymns. These proved rather incomprehensible and full of strange imagination but were very interesting and inventive. Later in color harmony this sensitive individuality found expression.

Velasques thought so highly of his pupil and assistant, that he gave him in marriage his only daughter, Francesco. At the request of Philip IV., Mazo made copies of the finest Venetian pictures in the royal collection, executing these in so masterly a manner that it was difficult to distinguish the copies from the originals. He also followed the individualities of his master with marked facility. Like Velasques, Mazo was a realist, recording the actual without emendation. In this "Portrait of a Marshal" the vigorous, solid substance of form, from which the detailed painting of the brocaded costume does not detract, the effective touches of black and red in their proper relations, the breadth of treatment and the truth all show a worthy pupil of a great master.

In the northern part of Italy bordered by the Adriatic there is a wild and picturesque region seldom visited by tourists. Within a few miles are the beauties of sea, lake, forest, and of rivers that rush down the mountains to the plains. During the winter season the shepherds, earning their way by minstrel songs, come down from these mountains, and often wander as far as Rome or Naples. "The Serenade" shows a characteristic incident of the picturesque nomadic life surrounding the home of Michetti in Francavilla, close to the Adriatic. The joyful, care-free gaiety of the people is portrayed against a background of equal brilliancy.

MIEREVELT (Michiel Janazen Van)

Holland

Born, Delft, 1567. Died, Delft, 1641.
Pupil of William Willemsy, Augustyn and of Blockland
Entered the Guild of The Hague, 1625

Earliest among the founders of the great Dutch school of portraiture was Mierevelt. Although he painted a few historical pictures and altar pieces for the churches at Delft, yet the devotion of his long life was given to that branch of his art for which he is famous. In his day the portraits of Mierevelt were universally admired, the demand and his accomplishment being equally great. Houbraken estimates his completed pictures at five thousand. Others swell the list to ten thousand. His style of portraiture, always dignified and concentrated shows both by the elegance of his accessories and the rank of his subjects, the artist's partiality for aristocracy. In his portraits may always be noticed a smooth and somewhat reserved brushwork together with fine drawing and characterization.

From an unwavering choice of religious subjects for his pictures which bore always the imprint of the painter's ardent piety, Morales was called El Divino (The Divine). There are but few instances of his drawing the figure at length; he painted mainly heads of a pathetic and emotional character. "His works," says Charles C. Perkins, "show careful drawing, correct anatomy, and fine gradation of demitints, and his heads are finished with the fastidious care of the early Florentine masters." Morales' pictures are principally found in the churches and oratories of Spain.

Paris

Born, Munkács, Hungary, 1846; died, Bonn, 1900 Studied in Vienna, Munich and Düsseldorf Medals, Paris, 1870-74-78 E. U.; Vienna, 1882 Legion of Honor, 1877; Officer, 1878 Member of the Munich Academy, 1881 Created an Austrian Baron, 1882 Member of the Austrian Order, Litteres et Artebus, 1887

Orphaned, self-educated and extremely poor, Munkácsy's apprenticeship to art was one of continuous struggle, first in Hungary and then in Germany, where a disease of the eyes forced him to spend six months in a hospital and threatened him with total blindness. During this time the brave young student, nothing daunted, dreamed of and planned for the picture here exhibited, which he considered his masterpiece. It illustrates a Hungarian custom. A condemned prisoner on the day before his execution is visited by his townspeople, who come either out of curiosity or to bring a contribution towards a mass for the criminal's soul. After regaining the use of his eyes, the picture was commenced, notwithstanding the fact that every one advised the young man to go back to his trade, that of a carpenter, the obstacles to his artistic career seeming insurmountable. When the picture (which was painted on the back of an old pew) was half finished, poverty prevented him from obtaining the paint necessary to its completion. At this crisis the collector of these pictures, Mr. Wilstach, visited Munkácsy's studio and instantly recognized his genius. He purchased the picture, paying for it in advance, thus enabling the artist to complete it. He then sent the picture to the Paris Salon, where its recognition as a work of extraordinary merit was instantaneous. Rarely has so sharp a contrast occurred in a human life as then followed, for reputation and wealth came rapidly, and first Paris and then the world delighted to honor this vigorous, intense and powerfully dramatic painter.

MURILLO (Bartolomé Estéban)

Seville

Born, Seville, 1618. Died, Seville, 1682 Pupil of his uncle, Juan del Castillo Founded the Seville Academy of Art, 1660

There were several years in the life of Murillo, who ranks second only to Velasques in the history of Spanish art, that were years of struggle for mere existence. Unknown and of a retiring disposition, his only resource was to take his pictures to the weekly market at Seville. Here, surrounded by provision stalls, standing among gypsies, muleteers and dealers in old clothes, he found his first patrons. Many of these pictures were brought to the Spanish possessions in America. In 1643, with a little money but with indomitable courage, he travelled on foot across the Sierras to Madrid. Arriving without money or friends, he appealed to his fellow-townsman, Velasques. Velasques took the young man into his own home, gave him valuable counsel and guidance, and being then in the height of his power, obtained permission for him to copy in the Royal Galleries. In 1645 Murillo returned to Seville and began a new era in his life by his decoration of the cloister of the Franciscan Convent. He was now porary Rome "that the soul of Raphael had passed into the person of Parmigianino." An idea of his exceptional power of mental concentration is found in an incident which occurred during the memorable sacking of Rome in 1527. Padre Affó relates that while the walls were scaled and the city taken by the invaders, Parmigianino continued his painting, "paying no attention to the roar of the artillery, the tumult of the people, or the shouts of the military." Fortunately the leader of the lawless men who invaded his house "happened to be an amateur of painting," and "contented himself by only requiring him to execute a good number of drawings." Unfortunately an infatuation for the study of alchemy led Parmigianino to waste his time and health in a search for the philosopher's stone, that dangerous reef to the mediæval world of science. In consequence of these researches a breach of contract occurred and he was thrown into prison. On promise of completing the desired fresco he was released, only to die shortly after. Lanzi speaks of his paintings as "at once great, noble and dignified." Sir Joshua Reynolds comments: "We are at loss which to admire most, the correctness of drawing or the grandeur of the conception."

Poussin, the founder of the classic and the academic in French art was called by Ruskin "the great master of elevated ideal landscape." "By neglecting nothing," to use the words of Poussin, he acquired a great reputation and exerted a wide influence. In 1624 he visited and settled in Rome, but in 1640 he returned to France, Cardinal Richelieu having prevailed upon Louis XIII. "to adorn himself with the talent of the absent artist." Although the king gave Poussin apartments in the Tuileries and showed him all honor, yet the painter found his position intolerable on account of jealous intrigues, and after two years he returned again to Rome. Hazlitt has said: "The Poussinesque landscape is characterized by something of the pedantry, the same stiffness, the same elevation, the same grandeur, the same mixture of art and nature as Milton's poetry."

Apprenticed to a goldsmith, Raeburn's first steps in art were minute drawings on ivory. Finished portraits in miniature soon followed, of which his worthy master assisted him to dispose with such success, that the young workman was enabled to purchase the remainder of his apprenticeship and to become professedly a painter of miniatures and, later, of portraits in oil. "For years, application, improvement and success went hand in hand," states Bryan, "and he might reckon the greater part of the distinguished men of Scotland of his time among his sitters and friends." The portrait here exhibited is strong in characterization, impressive in its coloring, life-like and vigorous in design, and is executed in a decisive and dashing style. It is a most convincing evidence of the power of Raeburn as an artist.

The chief characteristic of Raffaëlli's painting is the undeniable probability of its representation—the conviction of reality we experience when seeing it. With originality, keen observation and a fine sense of humor, he has seen nature alive, and with a rapid and facile brush has so painted it. Strength and character are evident everywhere. The street scenes of this "Painter of the Boulevards" are more instinct with vitality, movement, the ever changing effects of restless city life, than is possible with work of more studied conventionality and academic accuracy. "Repose," the picture here exhibited, won for the artist a gold medal when exhibited at the Paris Exposition, 1889.

This picture is delightful for the temperamental feeling with which it is painted. A mysterious figure of a woman is standing in the enveloping twilight before the long window of a brilliantly lighted room. The young moon and the woman's mystical face are reflected in the partially curtained casement. The relation of the atmosphere, in which the figure stands, to the lighted room in the background has been well maintained.

Pupil of Francisco Ribalta
' opointed Court painter
Member of the Academy of St. Luke, 1630
Knighted by Innocent X., 1644
Valencian and Neapolitan Schools

According to Cean Bermudes, Ribera was destined by his parents for the pursuit of letters, but preferring an art studio to a university he went early to Italy. Here he painted with untiring energy, although his extreme poverty at times made him dependent upon the precarious charity of his fellowstudents. A Cardinal, who pitied Lo Spagnoletto (the little Spaniard), attached him to his retinue. Ribera did not long remain, saying that the spur of poverty was necessary to his artistic success. He spent the greater part of his life in Italy, marrying the daughter of a rich picture dealer at Naples. Through the interest of the Spanish viceroy he received many commissions from Philip IV. of Spain. At his palace in Naples he entertained princes and nobles and, in 1630, Velasques. A pronounced mannerist, he was yet a man of remarkable strength and notwithstanding his choice of heavy shadows, a painter with fine color instinct.

During the summer fostered his love for nature by wandering through the country, living from hand to mouth, often the companion of gypsies, but studying and absorbing qualities that proved the foundation of his success. He won the first Prix de Rome ever given at Madrid for landscape, which afforded him the opportunity of four years' study in either Rome or Paris. It was in the latter city, with Zamacois, Meissonier and Daubigny to encourage him and the American art patron, William Stewart, to advance his interests that he climbed rapidly the ladder of fame. His work in oil and water colors is equally brilliant, animated and delicate, his pictures fairly sparkling with crisp effects.

Pupil of his uncle, Paolo Greco, and his brother-in-law, Francesco Fracanzano

"What is most admired in the works of Salvator Rosa," says Sir Joshua Reynolds, "is the perfect correspondence which he chose between the subjects which he chose and his manner of treating them. Everything is of a piece: his rocks, trees, sky, even to his handling, have the same rude and wild character which animates his figures." Developed under the influence of the naturalistic school, at eighteen years of age Salvator Rosa made a sketching tour through the Abruzzi. Among the dens of the banditti in this romantic and picturesque region he found many of the incidents of his pictures. Into landscapes of dramatic magnificence he also painted many battle scenes, the figures of which are full of movement and expression. Distinguished for a poetic elevation of soul, for daring conception, and splendor of coloring, Salvator Rosa became the boast of Naples, and the delight of Rome. Here, in addition to his artistic renown he also became famous as a musician, actor and a satirical poet.

"This first apostle of truth in landscape," as Edmond About calls Rousseau, was one of the most profound thinkers of this century in his own line. Foremost in the celebrated Fontainebleau-Barbizon school, he may be said to have founded the modern realistic method of portraying nature. He was devoted to its analysis and aimed to give pictorial expression to the inherent beauty contained in the truths of color, light and atmosphere. Exceptionally vigorous in technique and of fine imaginative powers, Rousseau gave a broad, majestic conception of nature which was frequently sublime in its pictorial poetry. Albert Wolfe asserts: "Corot painted the grace; Millet, the hidden voice; Jules Dupré, the majestic strength. Théodore Rousseau has been by turns as much a poet as Corot, as melancholy as Millet as awful as Dupré; he is the most complete, for he embraces landscape art absolutely." The honor of the earliest appreciation of the genius of Rousseau belongs to America.

At the Spanish Court, Gentleman of the Bedchamber

Painter, scholar, linguist, diplomatist. So splendid and varied is the record of this master's achievement that we do not wonder at the glowing tribute of the Marquis of Spinola when he said of Rubens: "He found so many talents combined in him, that for his own part, he believed the gift of painting to be one of the least considerable of them." Rubens was a man of experience in many countries. visited the Court of Spain as messenger of the Duke of Mantua in 1603. Nineteen years later he went to Paris at the express invitation of Maria de' Medici. In 1627, with the title of ambassador, he was sent to England as mediator in negotiating peace between that country and Spain. Here he was received with the honor due to his rank and commenced a brilliant, though arduous, career in diplomacy which lasted several years. Although these delicate negotiations necessitated much time and travel he never ceased to paint. He is reported to have said: "The painter Rubens occasionally amuses himself with diplomacy." If happiness is to be found in the successful cultivation and exercise of inherent talent, this master genius must have been the happiest of men. "He has taken a possession of the earth that no other man has;" states Eugène Fromentin. "His painted work comprises about fifteen hundred productions, the most immense output that ever issued from one brain. The means are simple, the method elementary, but employed by a hand magnificently agile, adroit, sensitive, and composed."

"Of all the Dutch painters, Ruisdael is the one who most nobly resembles his country. He has its breadth, sadness, rather dreary placidity and its monotonous and tranquil charm. He has left us of Holland a portrait which I will not call familiar, but intimate, lovable, admirably faithful, which never grows old. By still other claims Ruisdael is, as I fully believe, the most distinguished figure in the school after Rembrandt. . . . He maintains himself by a manner of his own; he is imposing, he in:presses us with respect and attracts attention, which warns us that before us is a man's soul, that this man is of a grand race, and that he always has something important to say. . . . Nothing, or almost nothing, is known of his existence. His great labor did not enrich him, and his title of burgher of Haarlem did not prevent him, it appears, from being almost forgotten. Of this we should have a truly harrowing proof, if it is true that, in commiseration of his distress, more than from respect to his genius, which was barely suspected by anyone, they were obliged to admit him to the almshouse at Haarlem, his native town, and that there he died."—Eugène Fromentin.

Born, near Rome, 1600. Died there, 1661 Pupil of his father, Benedetto Sacchi and Albani Roman School "The merit of a painter does not consist in giving to the world a large number of works of mediocrity, but a few perfect ones," said Andrea Sacchi. Acting on this maxim this painter became the most learned designer as well as the soundest colorist of the later Roman school. His pictures are rare, but Philadelphia has now two possessing both grace and distinction. These pictures present figures impressive in their simplicity and dignity. Together with accuracy of draughtsmanship and characterization, there is a true harmonious tone of color in which everything takes its appropriate place. The Vision of St. Romuald, in the Vatican, is Sacchi's greatest work, it having been considered as the fourth best easel picture in Rome.

Born of a wealthy and distinguished family, Schreyer was given every opportunity for study and travel. A delightful letter to Schreyer reads: "I came with Hert and Martinet to see you. You are gone out, but your genius remains at home. We have admired this marvellous picture of 'Chasse-Niege,' so true, so picturesque, so dramatic. I am egotistic enough to believe that I am a good judge in this matter. His skilful gardening enabled him always to have at hand dainty models for his pictures. Bryon states that he "gave to his imitations the beauty, brilliancy and variety with which nature clothed the originals." SIBANI (Elisabetta)

Italy

Born, Bologna, 1638. Died, Bologna, 1668 Pupil of her father, Andrea Sirani Bolognese School

It is astonishing that in only twenty-seven years of life Elizabetta Sirani accomplished so much. A list of her work enumerated by Malvaria, copied from the list kept by herself, amounts to one hundred and fifty pictures and portraits. Many of these are of large size and all are most carefully painted. She also executed some small but exquisitely finished histories on copper, which are valued possessions in the palaces of Bologna and Rome. When only seventeen years of age she had acquired such a reputation that commissions came to her from Italian princes, and the distinguished personages and monarchs of Europe. Her brilliant career came to an abrupt end through her death by poison, professional jealousy, it was thought, having instigated Elizabetta's maid to the murder. She was buried, with public demonstrations of sorrow in the Church of S. Domenico, resting in the same vault with the remains of Guido, the master whose methods she had followed and who had been the inspiration of her remarkable career.

Later he added a strong system of light and shadow, approaching nearer to that used by Caravaggio. The three daughters of Sirani were paint-

STEEN (Jan)

Holland

Born, Leyden, 1626. Died, Leyden, 1679 Pupil of Nicolas Knupfer and Jan van Goyen Influenced by Frans Hals and Adrian van Ostade Member of the Guild of Leyden, 1648

"One of the really fine brushmen of Holland," writes Henry Van Dyke, "a man greatly admired by Sir Joshua Reynolds and many an artist since. . . His brush was as limpid and graceful as though painting angels instead of Dutch boors." Steen presented life as a comedy, sometimes with grim satire and rather unpleasant truth, yet often in a spirit of sympathetic and genial toleration. As a dramatist he has been likened to Molière. He drew human nature and was a master of physiognomy. His figured groups are remarkable compositions because they give to the most thoughtful arrangement the effect of accidental combination. The subjects painted by Steen range from the grave Dutch citizen in his home, to the tavern scenes, which he studied while tavern keeper at Leyden.

France and Belgium present rival claims for this artist, who has exhibited since 1849 in both Paris and Brussels. He adds to the strength and exactness of his early Flemish education the greater subtlety of impression and the freedom and grace of French execution. One of the ablest and most charming painters of modern life, Stevens's pictures are remarkable for their delicacy of tone and perfection of coloring.

SWAN (John Macallan)

England

Born, Brentfort. Contemporary Pupil of J. L. Gérôme and E. Fremiet Honorable Mention, Salon, 1885 Silver Medal, 1889, E. U. Hors Concours

This English painter and sculptor of animal life owes his training entirely to France. His studies at the Beaux Arts, where he was fortunate in being placed with fellow students of such serious purpose as Bastien-Lepage and Dagnan-Bouveret, were supplemented, as his love for animals assumed definite form, by much practice at the Zoölogical Garden, and a most diligent study of anatomy at the various hospitals of Paris. A realist of finesse and forceful technique, Mr. Swan combines with his artistic knowledge of form and movement, a fine appreciation of color and a strong realization of the value of tonality—of oneness of feeling. Mr. R. A. N. Stevenson writes of "The Tigers by Moonrise," here exhibited: "The relation of the animals to the land-scape is admirable. It is by no means easy to adjust these huge, near-at-hand, forms with long undulating backs, so as to secure decorative dignity and some sense of natural space and proportion. The management of the stripes, moreover, deserves attention; far from producing an irritable pattern, they fall into the general arrangement and follow the form with agreeable suavity."

TANNER (Henry O.)

Paris

Born, Pennsylvania, 1859 Pupil of P. A. F. A., Jean Paul Laurens and Benjamin Constant Honorable Mention, 1896. Medal, 1897 Walter Lippincott Prize, P. A. F. A., 1900

Son of Bishop Tanner of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, this young Philadelphia painter has already won a prominent place in the ranks of American artists and has overcome any possible prejudice, especially in Paris, where Art is sufficiently catholic to ignore the distinctions of race. Tanner has had the courage to choose scriptural subjects for his pictures, and has thus challenged comparison with the great painters of every age and race. His pictures having much of the simplicity and fervid religious feeling of the old masters, are yet more than servile imitations, and are distinguished by originality and nobility in conception and no ordinary skill in execution.

This picture, so simple, yet so gracious in feeling, is lifted to a high plane by beauty of workmanship and distinction of style. It is not painted for the human interest—not with a portrait feeling—but for the sake of tender color in subtle contrast, and of values delicately differentiated that yet form perfect harmony. "The color is the melody, the values are the orchestration of the melody," says George Moore: "As the orchestration serves to enrich the melody, so do the values enrich the color." In this tone production in painting, with infinite subtlety and charm Mr. Tarbell has attained a mastery of truth.

Belgium

Born, Antwerp, 1610. Died near Brussels, 1690
Pupil of his father, David Teniers
Master of Antwerp Guild, 1632; Dean, 1644-45
Prime mover in the foundation of the Antwerp Academy, 1663
Member of Brussels Guild, 1675
Court painter to Archduke Leopold Wilhelm

The great success of Teniers was equal only to his ability. His execution is incomparably straightforward, his color is fine and stimulating and his arrangement of subject is always picturesque. The most eminent genre painter of Belgium, his career is one unbroken record of success and easy achievement. The Archduke Leopold William appointed him chamberlain, court painter and custodian of his rich gallery of paintings. His fame extended to other nations, and his country home became the resort of the Spanish and Flemish nobility. Teniers was among the first to depict the contemporary life of the noblemen, burghers and peasants of Holland. We see them in their homes, guard-rooms, taverns, at markets, fairs, festivals and merry-makings of every sort. Smith, in his Catalogue Raisonné, enumerates no less than seven hundred pictures from this marvellous brush.

He decorated the Archbishop's palace at Wurtzburg, and also, at the request of Charles III., the royal palace at Madrid. In the richly toned pictures of this painter the influence of Teniers, his probable master, is perceptible, but that of Brouwer is still more strongly to be seen. The varied composition shown in his treatment of the picturesque subjects he selected from the life that surrounded him proves the fruitfulness of his imagination. TINTORETTO, IL (Giacomo Robusti)

Italy

Born, Venice, 1518. Died, Venice, 1594 Venetian School

Il Tintoretto (the little dyer) derived his name from the occupation of his father, who was a silk dyer (tintore). Tintoretto had no acknowledged preceptor. He entered the studio of Titian, but after a few days his master dismissed him without assigning any reason. This insult served as an added spur to the superb energy of the young man. He devoted the day to painting, and the night to drawing, and on the wall of his studio he set forth his ideal: "The drawing of Michelangelo and the coloring of Titian." Tintoretto never refused work, frequently asking, as his only recompense, an opportunity to express the abundant wealth of his own thoughts. He was one of the great painters of the world before his fortieth year, and an acknowledged rival even of Titian. In a comparison of these two, Ruskin said: "Tintoretto has imagination and depth of soul which I think renders him indisputably the greatest man but, equally indisputably, Titian is the greatest painter." Berenson writes: "Tintoretto painted portraits not only with much of the air of good breeding of Titian's likenesses, but with even greater splendor and with an astonishing rapidity of execution. His portraits always render the man at his best, in glowing health, full of life and determination, and make us look back with amazement to a state where the human plant was in such vigor as to produce old men of the kind represented in most of his pictures."

A powerful landscape and animal painter. His superb grasp of the subject is full of force, freedom and directness. His knowledge of the animals he paints, their appearance, motions, life and peculiar characteristics, is complete. "The poetry of the fields has never been more feelingly interpreted than by him," writes Hamerton. "In the 'Oxen Going to Work,' we have a page of rustic description as good as anything in literature, of mighty oxen marching slowly to their toil! Who, that have seen these creatures work, can be indifferent to the steadfast grandeur of their nature? They have no petulance, no hurry, no nervous excitability, but they will bear the yoke upon their necks, and the thongs about their horns, and push forward without flinching from sunrise until dusk."

Henry Havard has said "The art of a nation is the synthesis of its dominating thoughts." Fully three-quarters of the paintings of the fifteenth century were of a religious character, the reason being not far to seek. Religious faith was the allpervading spirit of the age, the Church being an enlightened and generous art patron. Art was not only an adornment, it was a necessity to present to the people, who had no books, the vital points of their religious belief. "Painting was the color-thought and form language of the people," as John C. Van Dyke has truly said.

At first Utrecht painted simply for amusement, but his successful rendition of still life and the animals of the barnyard decided him to adopt art as a profession. Writer as well as architect and painter, Vasari has transmitted to us most valuable material in his biographical account of the painters of Italy. Spain

Born, Seville, 1599. Died, Madrid, 1660

"Velasques is a true master. If he has rivals, none is his superior," writes Léon Bonnat. the Spanish master seeks above all is character and truth. He is a realist in the broadest and best acceptation of the word. He paints nature as he sees her Posterity, with all gratiand as she is. tude bows before his powerful originality." though the life of Velasques was one of long triumph, his European reputation is of comparatively recent origin. Until the first quarter of the nineteenth century his pictures remained without popular appreciation in the palaces and museums of Madrid. It is largely owing to this fact that during the Peninsular war, they escaped the rapacity of the French marshals. Polomino speaks in glowing terms of the courtly refinement of Velasques. Whenever this favorite of Philip IV. travelled, he was received with all the honors usually accorded to princes. It was during his second visit to Italy that he painted the celebrated portrait of Pope Innocent X., which was received with such enthusiasm that it was carried in triumphal procession by the people. On his return the king conferred upon him the highly remunerative post of Aposentador de Palacio, or palace marshal. This made it necessary for Velasques to attend the king whenever he left the Capital. In 1660, a meeting of the French and Spanish courts was arranged on the Isle of Pheasants to celebrate the nuptials of the youthful Louis XIV. and the Infanta Maria Teresa. His arduous duties in connection with these festivities made Velasques ill. On his death the Spanish master was buried with great pomp in the Church of San Juan.

VERONESE (Carlo Caliari)

Italy

Born, 1570. Died, 1596
Pupil of his father, Paolo Veronese and Jacopo Bassano
Venetian School

Carlo Veronese gave early proof of exceptional talent. Before his eighteenth year he had produced work of distinguished character, the prediction that he would equal if not surpass his father, Paolo Veronese, being generally made. Indeed Carlo completed several pictures left unfinished by the death of his father, that great exponent of Venetian splendor. It is said that the young painter impaired his constitution by too incessant application; whatever the cause, his promising career ended when he was only twenty-six years of age. "The Duchess of Modena" is presented with a cheerfulness and frank worldliness, a love of display combined with a naturalness of feeling that are very appealing to the eye.

"Atmosphere in an interior is more difficult to paint than in open air," says the scholarly modern painter, Alfred Stevens. This problem is well handled in this picture of the interior of a large church, probably the one at Delft, where Van Vliet lived. In extraordinary facility, great force in handling color, sure brushwork, broadly given in swift, uncompromising and vigorous strokes, this "painter's painter," in still life at least, never had a superior. Still-life painting with Vollon ceases to become mere imitation, but with good grouping, fine lighting, and atmospheric effect is elevated to the pictorial, and is dignified and valued accordingly. The still-life here exhibited is characterized as "Vollon's masterpiece in America." De Vos came under the dominating influence of Rubens, yet he maintained his strong personality and showed a more marked independence than any of his contemporaries. This family group is given with strength, concentration and simplicity. It is strong in value—that corner stone of Dutch and Flemish art—and is dignified and true in characterization. "Art is the 'eternization' in a supreme force absolute and definite, of the 'fugitivity' of a creature or of a human being," state Edmond and Jules de Concourt. This picture is one of the most artistic examples of the portraits of De Vos in any of our galleries, whether private or public.

The delicate expressiveness of Whistler's art is entirely personal and in its refinement of invention and mysterious simplicity of method has always remained very much the same. The flowing, supple execution is apparently very sketchy; but, as John C. Van Dyke has truly said, "it is the maximum of effect with the minimum of effort." Without any loss to his own individuality, Whistler has studied the art of Japan and that of Velasques, and has known how to successfully assimilate their great principles of selection from nature's subtleties, rather than attempt to literally copy her charm. His Nocturnes are unrivalled in their vibrant, transparent, luminous darkness, and the portraits of this master are painted with imaginative and decorative treatment. The lady here portrayed, passing into mysterious space, is given with tender analytical judgment, combined with rare simplicity of intention and unison of tone.

WYLIE (Robert)

Philadelphia

Born, Isle of Man, 1839. Died, Brittany, 1877 Medal, Paris, 1872

This artist, in whose career Mr. Wilstach took a deep personal interest, went to Paris in 1865 to study with Barye, intent upon becoming a sculptor. He had been equipped in the principles of art in the schools of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, holding there for the four years previous, the position of curator, and exhibiting annually during this time busts and medallions in clay and ivory. He finally settled in Brittany, where he turned his attention to painting, continuing to show in this medium that pronounced and delicate feeling for form which had drawn him to sculpture. His pictures are painted in a style full of truthfulness and authority, with much solidity and breadth of treatment.

A man of keen wit and originality, painting, with pure and intense color, in a style polished and complete. His pictures are mainly satires, rendered with force and ability. Eugene Benson says: "Zamacois has a suspicion of malice that must be delightful to the compatriots of Voltaire," and later that he is "kindred to Molière. If you could suppose something of Molière's genius, embodied in a series of sonnets, you would have a just literary expression of Zamacois as a painter." Dying when but thirty years of age he left the memory of a career of unusual brilliancy.

In that first requirement and indispensable charm of painting, the harmonious fusion of color, in atmosphere and suggestion of movement, we find Ziem at his best. The mornings and evenings of Holland and Venice, which he has given us, are melodious with rhythmic notes of color, the rich reflections of the artist's colorful mind. "He excels," writes Edmond About, "in mirroring the most brilliant colors in a canal. The least wind, which perchance ruffles the face of the water, furnishes a delicious matter for his brush."

ZURBARAN (Francisco de)

Spain

Born, Fuente de Cantos, Estremadura, 1598. Died, Madrid, 1662 Pupil of Juan de las Roelas

Although the parents of Zurbaran were of the laboring class, they gave their son an opportunity to study art at Seville, recognizing his especial talent. The young student constantly painted from nature, cultivating that broad handling and strong contrast of light and shade which won for him the title of "the Spanish Caravaggio." Before his twentieth year he had acquired a wide reputation. In 1650 he was called by Philip IV. to Madrid to decorate a room at the Buen Retiro Palace. The King showed him many marks of friendship, affectionately styling him "Painter to the King and King of Painters." Although he shared with his friend Velasques the title of Court Painter, he was essentially a recluse and loved most the religious atmosphere of the cloister. His representations of monastic life won for him an ever increasing reputation. It is believed that the noted beauties of his time were the originals of the lovely saints he pic-Zurbaran possessed great strength and finish of treatment, together with a free, vigorous touch. The soft glow of color which permeates his pictures suggests the Venetian painters.

"Keenly tormented by his intense desire to become a sculptor," as Barye expressed it, his apprenticeship of twenty-two years was one of great poverty, disappointment and patient labor. His love and unwavering belief in his art, his capacity for incessant study, his complete insight and artistic knowledge of the character, mode of life, power and fascination of animal nature and his comprehension of arrested movements were the attributes of genius. Léon Bonnat writes: "Barye is one of the greatest artists of the age, I may even say of all the ages. If I had a comparison to make I should think of Balzac. Barye has understood the animal and conveyed it with a power equal to that which Balzac has manifested in those passionate researches, in which he has so powerfully interpreted the heart of man. Both have left their ineffaceable stamp upon the world."

POWERS (Hiram)

Florence

· Born, Vermont, 1807. Died, Florence, 1873

It was in 1826 that Powers discovered his latent talent for sculpture. With a quickly acquired knowledge of modelling, he secured a position as general assistant and artist in the waxwork department of a museum in Cincinnati where certain of his ingenious illustrations of Dante's Inferno awakened general attention. Powers then studied modelling and casting thoroughly and in 1834 went to Washington, where he modelled portraits of the President and many leading statesmen. In 1837 he settled in Florence, where his statue of "Eve" (pronounced a masterpiece by Thorwaldsen) and his well known "Greek Slave," were given to the world.
